What if you manage an expansive portfolio of foreclosed properties and they all need to be kept secure?

CASE STUDY

Field Servicers

The field services industry provides professional services to preserve the assets of nationwide banks and mortgage companies. Field servicers provide clean up, debris removal, lawn maintenance, repair, winterization, inspection and much more—for properties often numbering in the tens of thousands. As inventories change, new properties must be secured and protected as quickly as possible to preserve them for resale.

Field servicers want professionalism and timeliness —with a minimum of hassle. With a typical turnaround time of a few days from first request to final installation, VPS systems fit the bill.

When it comes to security, field servicers are turning to VPS. Those in management want professionalism and timeliness within a one-stop vendor. With a typical turnaround time of a few days from first request to final installation, VPS is the perfect choice to preserve and maintain your assets.

VPS steel door securing systems are an aesthetically pleasing and effective alternative to securing with plywood. Its steel doors and windows are virtually impenetrable to criminals and invulnerable to arson, and the VPS system is more affordable than security guards. Neighborhood residents feel safe knowing criminals cannot enter their properties, while managers in the field services industry love knowing their rented security systems are reusable, sustainable and environmentally friendly.

From government-operated properties like schools or public housing communities to privately owned buildings like hospitals or foreclosed homes, every property has a story. And every property has its own security challenges. VPS is there to meet those challenges—to protect vacant properties from criminal activity and to prevent theft of fixtures and other valuables. Whatever your situation, VPS has you covered.
